

Safety in Design

Wednesday, March 15

Join the AIRAH Victorian committee as Warwick Stannus, M.AIRAH, Group Engineering Manager, A.G. Coombs, will present on the safety-in-design responsibilities of building owners, designers and installers. Although the intent of the regulations are clear, the discharge of safety-in-design responsibilities can be complex. Warwick will focus on the risk-management process and deliverables required to meet the safety-in-design regulations, as well as addressing a number of common safety-in-design issues related to maintenance access and electrical safety.

Paul Ashton, Compliance Consultant with Access Compliance Services, will also present on the height safety risks that face mechanical contractors every day. He will explain why certain situations are high-risk, and how to protect and mitigate against these risks. Paul will look at the different types of fall protection available and what applications are best suited for different situations.

Dr Cameron Chick, M.AIRAH, of Acronem Consulting will also present on the proliferation of different pipe insulation materials in buildings. These have highlighted shortcomings in the ability of existing test methods to adequately ensure the objectives of regulatory requirements for fire performance behaviour.
